

Counsellors needed as participants for a qualitative study on working therapeutically with self harm

The aim of the project is to explore the feelings and understandings of the counsellors' experiences of working with those clients who self-harm.

This research is about self-harm. Whilst topics like suicide can be mentioned by the participants, the questions asked are focused on self-harm

I am a third year Psychology student at the University of Staffordshire, who is researching about counsellors' experiences of working with clients who self-harm.

I am interested in recruiting participants who are qualified counsellors, registered with a recognised counselling organisation, who have experiences of working with clients who self-harm.

Participation in this qualitative study will involve an online interview, conducted on Teams, and lasting for around 1 hour

If you are interested in taking part, then please email me Tajay Kellar (Researcher) at k044700m@student.staffs.ac.uk.

Further information including a participant information sheet, consent form and debrief sheet will be sent to anyone who wishes to take part.
